A former President of the Association of Plastic Surgeons of India (APSI) and Chairman of APSI Trustees, Dr. Suresh Chand Gupta, who brought the World Congress of International Confederation for Plastic Reconstructive and Aesthetic Surgery (IPRAS) to the country, was a true icon of Indian plastic surgery (► Fig. 1).

On October 5, 1933, in Aligarh, he was born to Rai Bahadur Shiv Prasad, the Collector of Aligarh, a landowner who also owned cotton ginning mills at Hathras. His initial schooling was at the prestigious Modern School, Barakhamba Road, New Delhi (► Fig. 2). This school was set up in 1920 by Lala Raghurib Singh, a philanthropist who desired an institution that combined the “best of ancient Indian tradition with the needs of the times.” It was the first private and coeducational school established in Delhi after the capital of the British Raj shifted to the city.¹ Dr. Gupta epitomized the school motto quoted above.

Academic Career

Dr. Gupta had a distinguished academic career and graduated in 1955 from Medical College, Agra, with Gold Medal and Honours. He subsequently went on to complete MS (General Surgery) in the year 1958 from the same college. From 1958 to 1960, he worked at the Irwin Hospital (now LNJP Hospital), New Delhi, with the legendary Dr. S.K. Sen. He was introduced to plastic surgery by a person no less than Sir Harold Gillies in 1959 at Jaipur. His interest saw him seeking plastic surgery training in the UK. From 1960 to 1965, he worked at East Grinstead (England) in Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery as a Senior Registrar. During his tenure there, he published a seminal article on breast reduction.² When he returned to India, he was a full member of the British Association of Plastic Surgeons (BAPS).

On coming back to India in 1965, he joined Irwin Hospital (till 1968) and Sir Gangaram Hospital, New Delhi, as a Hon. Consultant. Around the same time, he also joined the Northern Railway Hospital in New Delhi. During the Indo-Pak war that year, he was also appointed as a Hon. Consultant to the Indian Armed Forces. He started the “Delhi Plastic Surgery Clinic,” the only dedicated private clinic for plastic surgery at that time, 1971, at his residence, Greater Kailash.

He was always a keen learner, and in 1981, he attended the first ever microsurgery workshop organized in Delhi (► Fig. 3a), where Prof. Edgar Biemer was a part of the faculty. Then, the following year, he visited Prof. Biemer in Munich to train further in microsurgery skills (► Fig. 3b). That was the start of a long-standing friendship between them. He was truly one of the pioneers of microsurgery in India. Thereafter, he set up a microsurgical laboratory at Sir Gangaram Hospital to practice and train other younger colleagues. Dr. Rakesh Khazanchi, current President APSI, recalls that once he had taken a rat to him in a shoebox to learn a venous anastomosis.

Leading the Societies

Dr. Suresh Gupta was elected President of the APSI in 1977 at the early age of 44 years. In the same year, he along with Dr. I.K. Dhawan, Lt. Col. P.M.L. Kathpalia, Dr N.C. Madan, Dr. S.S. Sethi, Dr. Vimla Rajan, and Dr. S.C. Almast formed the “Association of Plastic Surgeons of India—Delhi Chapter” and got it registered. Thus, the Delhi Chapter of APSI got registered independently even before the parent society! Dr. Suresh Gupta was its first President. The Delhi Chapter of APSI went into dormancy after being active for a few years before resuming operations in 1996. During the APSI Presidency of Admiral J.C. Sharma, it was once again revived by Brig. L.P. Sadhotra (who became the Treasurer) and Dr Rajeev B. Ahuja (who became the Secretary), with the active support of Dr Suresh Gupta (who provided the registration documents) and the blessings of Rear Admiral J.C. Sharma.

He was not only the first aesthetic surgeon of India but also enthusiastic about establishing this specialty in India. Although the Indian Association of Aesthetic Plastic Surgeons (IAAPS) was registered in September 1995, it languished for want of enough plastic surgeons interested or trained in aesthetic surgery. The few initial members of the Association in 1999 requested Dr. Suresh Gupta to take over the reins and resurrect it. He invited Dr. Ian Jackson, Dr. Edgar Biemer, and Dr. Illouz to teach aesthetic surgery at various meetings. Dr. Gupta's bonding with Dr. Ian Jackson was also very strong (►Fig. 4). Often on their trips to Delhi Dr. Jackson and Dr. Biemer would stay at Dr. Gupta's house. Such was the close bonding with Dr. Biemer that Dr. Gupta was invited to the 60th birthday celebrations of Dr. Biemer in the year 2000, an event attended by top microsurgions from around the world (►Fig. 5).

Dr. Gupta was also active in international societies. He served on the executive body of the IPRAS, representing India and East. In 1987, he organized the World Congress of IPRAS, which was a resounding success. The Chief Guest at the Inaugural Ceremony was Shri Rajiv Gandhi, The Prime Minister of India (►Fig. 6). Shri Giani Zail Singh, hosted a reception for the delegates at the Rashtrapati Bhawan (→Fig. 7). From the savings of this International Congress, he initiated two fellowships (national and international) to help young plastic surgeons to travel for advanced training. From 1987 to 1996, he served as Director of the International Foundation of Plastic Surgery. Dr. Suresh Gupta was also the President of the IPRAS 2009 Congress, chaired by me in Delhi (→Fig. 8). In 2011, he was appointed as the Chairman of the Board of Trustees of APSI, a position he was still holding.

Landmark Supreme Court Judgement

Dr. Suresh Gupta will be remembered forever for the landmark 2004 Supreme Court judgment, where the criminal liability of a surgeon was redefined, and this decision came as a boon for the surgical profession in consumer liability³

A Keen Golfer and Philanthropist

Dr. Suresh Gupta was also very active in the Rotary club (Delhi Qutub) and in the India chapter of an international charitable NGO, The Kiwani's Club of New Delhi. For this NGO, he conceptualized and set up a dedicated artificial limb center in Delhi. The NGO was started by a very elite group of industrialists, bureaucrats, retired Chief of Staffs of the armed forces, etc.

Dr. Suresh Gupta was a keen golfer, and he played at the Delhi Golf Club (DGC) over the weekends, as he never worked on weekends! I fondly remember having a few lunch meetings with him at the DGC when I was the Secretary of APSI. "On his return from the UK, the work was minimal, and he spent his time learning golf," recalls Dr. Ashok Gupta, his son. "He would practice till he succeeded and was always imbibing finer points of the game."

A man of impeccable taste, he thrived in dressing as elegantly as he conducted himself. In his son's words, "his passion and in-depth knowledge of Hindustani classical music, which was self-taught, reached the level and expertise of a highly educated advanced listener, who could appreciate the depth, range, and perfection of this great skill/art.” His passion for well-prepared food was also notable, and he always served a teetar (partridge) prepared by a special chef in Jama Masjid on all his birthday parties. I am a witness to some of the who's who of Delhi who attended these parties.

Dr. Gupta married Ms. S.R. Gupta on November 22, 1959. Mrs. Gupta retired as an Associate Professor of Physiology in 1984 from All India Institute of Medical Sciences (AIIMS). They have three children, Ashok, a vascular surgeon, Aruna who works in California in health services, and Nalini, who works in telecommunications and data development. They have five grandchildren.

Untimely Demise

A thorough professional, Dr. Gupta literally worked till the last day. He was conferred the Plastic Surgeon of the Year award (2020) by APSI, but he unfortunately could not receive it, as APSICON was cancelled in 2020. Last year, Dr. Gupta wrote a letter to the President of APSI, expressing his wish to donate Rs 20 Lakhs to start a teaching activity; sadly, he passed away before he could be formally informed of the Executive Committee's approval.

We pray for the departed soul.
